

Translating Without the Hassle

How a Swiss Insurance Provider
Streamlined Multilingual Workflows

CASE STUDY

Executive Summary

A leading Swiss insurance provider significantly reduced time managing multilingual documents by implementing Foxit PDF Editor's built-in translation functionality. Previously relying on manual workarounds, the team streamlined operations with direct in-PDF translations, preserving formatting, minimizing errors, and freeing employees to focus on higher-value tasks. This case study explores how Foxit helped them simplify processes, accelerate delivery, and improve service to international clients.

Operational Inefficiencies with Manual Translation

Handling documents in multiple languages at this insurance firm was critical, but inefficient. Teams manually translated content by converting PDFs to Word, copying text into translation tools, and then rebuilding the document in PDF format. This cumbersome method was time-consuming and error-prone, often resulting in formatting issues, version control headaches, and duplicated effort.

Simplified Translation with Foxit PDF Editor

The team eliminated the need for third-party software or conversions by integrating Foxit PDF Editor's translation feature. Employees now translate text directly in PDF while maintaining original layouts and formats. The AI-driven workflow has significantly reduced the time and effort needed for document preparation, enabling employees to verify content quickly and with fewer revisions.

Time Saved Combined with Accuracy Gained

This shift has resulted in measurable improvements. Translating documents now takes a fraction of the time, allowing teams to focus on content quality rather than format correction. With reduced reliance on external tools and manual steps, the process is faster, more consistent, and more secure, ultimately allowing the provider to serve its international clientele better.
